

Session 6

Angry Birds

We've seen in the gospel of John that in Jesus we have the full embodiment of grace and truth. And we go on in the New Testament to discover that as Jesus followers, we also must somehow get to that full embodiment of both grace and truth. If we're just grace, or if we're just truth, there will always be something missing.

In many scenarios from Jesus' life, we can see how he applied this. He surprises us with his amazing ability to dispense grace and truth in just the right amounts.

So how do we do that as well?

In our last session, we looked at how Jesus modeled the embodiment of grace and truth. In this session, we'll see where he actually taught this. And what made his teaching so significant on this occasion was his audience. It's an audience in which we're sure to find ourselves.

What is the most valuable thing you've ever lost? How did you respond to losing it? Did you eventually find it? If so, how did you react to finding it?

Video Overview For Session 6 of the DVD

As Luke 15 begins, Jesus finds himself surrounded by two very different groups. One group, "tax collectors and sinners," felt they were so alienated from God that he would never approve of them.

The other group, "Pharisees and the teachers of the law," believed they were so good that God already approved of them. And they were muttering this about Jesus: "This man welcomes sinners and eats with them."

In response, Jesus told a simple story of a man with a hundred sheep who loses one. Jesus asked his audience, "Doesn't he leave the ninety-nine in the open country and go after the lost sheep until he finds it?" (15:4). Jesus described this man's joy upon finding his lost sheep. "In the same way," Jesus added, there will be more rejoicing in heaven over one sinner who repents than over ninety-nine righteous persons who do not need to repent" (15:7).

He then told another story of a woman who lost a valuable coin. Again Jesus asked, “Doesn’t she light a lamp, sweep the house and search carefully until she finds it?” (15:8) Finding it, the woman was filled with joy. “In the same way,” Jesus added, “there is rejoicing in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner who repents” (Luke 15:10).

Jesus then launched a third story; it was about a man with two sons. The older son was a “behave”; the younger was a misbehave.” Shockingly, the younger son spurned his relationship with his father and asked for his inheritance. He traveled to a distant country and squandered his new wealth on reckless living—another detail that would shock Jesus’ hearers. Having lost everything, the disgraced young man was further battered when a famine struck the land. The only work he could find was feeding pigs with food that he himself began craving. Surely, he was only getting what he deserved.

But Jesus went on to tell of this starving son coming to his senses and deciding to return home to confess, “Father, I have sinned against heaven and against you. I am no longer worthy to be called your son; make me like one of your hired servants” (15:18-19). Surely servanthood for life was a worthy fate for this reprobate.

But Jesus then painted a picture of a stunningly incredible reception for this boy. His father lavished compassion, tenderness, and restoration upon this son who had humiliated him. He called for a celebration feast. But all this angered the firstborn son. He was angered in the way some Christians are today—Christians who self-righteously believe they deserve better treatment from God than they’re getting, and who despise the grace God shows to the “undeserving.”
