Read the text. Then do tasks a and b.

Music is in the air

The Glastonbury Festival is the largest greenfield festival in the world with about 175,000 people now.

It takes place near Pilton, South England for five days in June. People can listen to leading rock and pop artists and also enjoy dance, comedy, theatre, circus, cabaret, and other arts, performed on several stages.

Michael and Jean Eavis hosted the first festival on their Worthy Farm in 1970, then called Pilton Festival. Their youngest child, Emily Eavis, is very much the daughter of Glastonbury Festival. Her first Glastonbury memories are full of hot festival days, smells from the campfires at dinnertime and people sitting close to the stage watching music.

Most people who stay at Glastonbury Festival camp in a tent. There are many different camping areas, each with its own atmosphere. Cockmill Meadow is a family campsite and Wicket Ground was introduced in 2011 as a second family-only campsite. A campsite for the disabled is also available in Spring Ground. Campsite accommodation is included in the cost of a standard entry ticket but festival-goers must bring their own tents. Tepees* have been at the festival for many years. A limited number of fixed tepees are available for hire at the tepee field near the stone circle. Up to six adults can stay in each tepee and each one comes with a groundsheet and raincatcher. Internal bedding and camping equipment is not provided, but the Tepee Park also offers solar showers and a sauna.

Camper vans, caravans and trailers are no longer allowed into the main festival site: They were banned in the early 1990s after a number were stuck in the mud and abandoned.

Glastonbury Festival has always been a family affair. Emily Eavis wants to continue this tradition that her parents once started.

Emily grew up in the same small farmhouse where she now lives with her husband, music manager Nick Dewey, and their two sons. As a child she sometimes hated the festival: she couldn't understand why so many people were in their garden!

Today, having parents that run a festival might make you the most popular kid at school, but back then it was a different story: drug and violence rumours connected with the festival circulated around her school.

Emily didn't always want to work for the festival. She started training to become a school teacher. In 1999 her mother died of cancer and Emily returned home to help her father with the festival.

Now she works as the co-organiser and is responsible for booking major music acts like Kanye West, Beyonce or Coldplay.

Emily's favourite part of the festival is the first day when people rush in, excited and smiling. It still gives her butterflies. And even if there is pouring rain, people are still smiling from ear-to-ear.

2.2 Mediation

Read the advertising for a cultural event in England. Write down the facts asked for in German.

A new exhibition of classic Glastonbury Festival photographs has opened today at the Assembly Rooms, Glastonbury. Entry is free and the exhibition runs until the middle of October, opening from 12 to 6 pm each day (closed Sunday and Monday).

More than fifty images – reproduced in giant wall-sized scale! – show the beginnings, the struggles and the enduring legend of the world’s largest open air greenfield festival.

Also displayed is a stunning large-scale (3 metres) canvas reproduction of Stanley Donwood’s ‘Moon Over Pilton’ image from 2015, signed by the artist.
