

FRANCISCO CAMPOS-LOPEZ

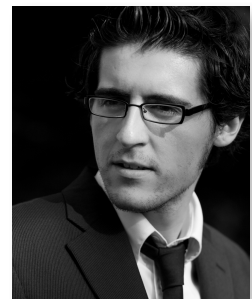

BIOGRAPHY

Filmmaking is all about rhythm. It's a language that entails a lot of factors, such as acting tone, light, camera movement, among others. All those details are not in serve of the desired rhythm, they are in serve for the needed rhythm.

He was born in a small town in Chile, and has been shooting since he was a young child. At 17, he moved to Santiago to begin his formal studies in film making. He attended the Chilean Film School (Escuela de Cine de Chile) in Santiago. After which he moved to Buenos Aires where he began his career as a filmmaker. While in Buenos Aires he was mentored by the finest in the Argentinean film industry in directing, screenwriting, and acting directing.

His award winning film, Acassis, -"Best Thriller Award" at the New York International Independent Film Festival 2007- has been shown worldwide and marks the end of his formation in Argentina. The New York press proclaimed him as one of "the upcoming Latin directors to watch."

In 2009, Francisco relocated to the United States to continue his career as a filmmaker. The Department of Homeland Security of the U.S. granted him the O-1 Visa, for extraordinary ability in Arts. Francisco has the recognition of his peers in the States and from important unions, such as WGA. Since his arrival to the US, Francisco has shot films, commercials, music videos and documentaries, lining up work overseas.

He was awarded a Telly TM for one of his music videos. Among his accolades, Campos-Lopez was featured as "Director of the Month" (October 2010) on Sony's site for film/video professionals, Videon, having his work, featured in the "Shot Like a Pro" Sony campaign all over the United States of America. And, the cover story in October 2010 in ONTap Magazine.
