

This graph measures counties across California, comparing their incomes versus how many high school students they graduate ready for college each year.

The counties above the black line are doing better than expected given their wealth; those below, worse.

In general, Sonoma County rates poorly given what would be expected for a county of its wealth; it is one of the clearest and worst underperformers.

Sonoma Valley, however, is different. The Valley of the Moon does 40% better than the rest of Sonoma County. Sonoma Valley also now outperforms Napa as well.
