figurative language IDIOMS

language INFERENCE

Weston and Tim love to play soccer. They would play morning, noon and night. One day, they decided to go play at Jefferson Park. When they got there, some older boys were already kicking a soccer ball around. Weston asked if they could play. "No way!" one of the older boys shouted. Weston was disappointed.

They went back home and sat in Tim's backyard. "Why won't they let us play?" Weston asked. "I don't know," Weston replied. They dribbled the soccer ball back and forth as they sadly wondered if they would ever get to play soccer at Jefferson Park. The next day, Weston had a bold idea. "We should challenge those older boys to a game. If we beat them, they'll have to let us play."

Tim and Weston steadied their nerves. They kicked the ball back and forth. Weston gave the ball a big kick and sent it flying into the corner! "Yes!" Tim hollered.

Now Weston and Tim had to play defense against the bigger and faster older boys. They worked together to steal the ball back. They maneuvered down the field and scored. The score was now 2-1. Tim and Weston were excited. Weston passed the ball to Tim, and Tim flipped upside down and did a bicycle kick! The ball shot into the back of the net. Tim and Weston were smiling.

"Fine", one of the older boys said, "you can play with us now." Tim and Weston did their secret handshake and smiled. They were elated.
