Role Playing

1. You have met someone at your school that is a recent immigrant to your country. Invite them to lunch to share some things about your culture.
2. Your company will be hiring some people that have recently immigrated to your country. Meet with some co-workers and talk about some things you can do to make the new immigrants feel more comfortable in their new working environment. Things you might want to consider: Setting up a cultural food day to have all employees share foods from their native countries; Assign a mentor to support any questions they may have; Providing English Language assistance support for family members
3. While you support immigration into your country, you are concerned that the new immigrants might be taking all the jobs, leaving local people jobless. Meet with a friend to talk about some solutions for this.
4. You are from a predominantly English-speaking country and believe that all immigrants should be proficient in the English language before they immigrate to your country. One of our friends disagrees with you, saying that they can learn it after they arrive. Have a discussion with your friend about this.
5. You believe that immigrants should not be entitled to social services/welfare programs, that these programs should be reserved for citizens. Talk with a friend about this and get their opinion.
