20 YEARS OF JACKSON GUITARS

In the fall of 1980 we were visited by the late, great Randy Rhoads who had just returned from a tour with Ozzy Osbourne. Randy asked us to build him a guitar based on a "Flying V", and showed us some very simple ideas he had drawn. After discussing the ideas for a while, the final design was agreed upon and the guitar was built. Being radically different from anything we had done previously the Jackson name was used on the guitar. The guitar was a huge hit and was the first of many models to come under the Jackson name.

It is important to know at least some of this history in order to be able to better explain what Jackson Guitars is all about. It is also necessary to show how Jackson is different from all other manufacturers with regards to philosophy and approach to guitar design and image. While most guitar companies were founded and continue to operate around very conservative traditions, Jackson is ultimately built on innovation and re-invention. We offer a radically different approach to guitar design and manufacturing that has become our trademark. For this reason our name has endured the test of time by being a company that can offer what others can't. And in the music industry, where there are often no rules, our approach has proven to be valuable to musicians who are looking for an alternative to the more traditional designs.

There aren't many other manufacturers that have such a clear cut identity and it is our identity that has allowed us to continue to grow while others have fallen aside. Some struggled because they were in the business of cloning more traditional designs and their rivals inevitably pushed them out of the picture. But we at Jackson Guitars offer an alternative to those of you who don't want to play the same instruments your parents and grandparents played.

Long Live Rock and Roll. Jackson Guitars, The Evolution of The Soul.
