About me

I am a 30-year old tech enthusiast whose journey began with music and transformed into a deep passion for product development, marketing, and, eventually, software development.

When I graduated at the Herman Brood Academy, I started as a web developer at Heroic—where I eventually managed to rise to the position of marketing manager at Heroic Academy.

Throughout my career, I found a common thread that underpinned all my professional interests - coding. Starting with HTML, CSS, and JavaScript, I have steadily increased my competency in key frameworks

Today, I have honed my capabilities in Typescript, gained valuable experience in the serverless realm, and expanded my understanding of database structures. I have shipped several production apps, some

As a proactive learner, I believe in constantly broadening my horizons, which is evident founding the company HEATE. In retrospect, this venture wasn't about entrepreneurship, as much as it was about creating a space for like-minded individuals to learn and grow.

In my downtime, I enjoy cooking, traveling, playing games with friends, and photography. I find that these activities fuel my creativity and widen my perspective.

What I'm looking for

After wrapping things up at HEATE, I'm on the lookout for new software development opportunities. Right now, I'm leaning towards freelancing - I like the variety and the flexibility it offers. That said, I'm open to part-time / full-time roles too.

The right gig could give me a regular team to learn from and interesting projects to get stuck into. Ideally, it'd be a job that lets me use all the tricks in my software development toolkit and keeps me on my toes. I'm really excited about this next step in my career journey, and I can't wait to see where it takes me!
