Language Disorder

What is a Language Disorder?

- o On-going difficulties understanding and/ or using spoken language.
- Language difficulties create obstacles to communication and/or learning in everyday life,
- o Children with language disorders need to be directly taught language skills that other children may learn naturally.

What signs may a child/ young person with a language disorder show?

- They may not talk as much and find it difficult to express themselves verbally
- They may struggle to find words or use varied vocabulary
- o They may not understand, or remember, what has been said
- Older children may have difficulties reading and using written language
- Note: language disorders looks different in each individual child. The child's specific difficulties can also change as they get older and need to develop more complex skills.

How will this affect my child?

- A language disorder is a long term condition that can have a big impact on a child/ young person's learning and achievement at school.
- Children with language disorders are at risk of reading difficulties when they reach school age.
- Sometimes children with language disorder will also have difficulty with social interaction and their ability to make and keep friends.
- Children with language disorder often learn and understand better through visual and/or practical methods, rather than verbal methods. For example, they would understand a story better if they watched it being acted out and drew it, rather than being told it verbally.

- How can you support your child at home?
 - Get your child's attention say their name before asking questions or giving instruction so they know when to listen
 - Ensure your child can see your face to support their attention and listening
 - Use simple language and repeat if necessary to support memory and provide as many opportunities for them to hear, see and use words
 - o Talk calmly and slowly to support their ability to process words
 - Give your child more time to respond to help them process information
 - Use of symbols provide a picture and/or use gestures to represent new words or concepts to support their understanding visually
 - Encourage your child to communicate with you however they can, accept gesture, pointing, facial expression
 - Check they have understood instructions or new information
 - Help them learn skills to join in with other children. For example, playing games at home to support turn taking and listening to others
