

Engaging the HE community, industry and government through benchmarking international student employability

Sara Booth

University of Tasmania, Launceston, Tasmania
Sara.Booth@utas.edu.au

Sue Read

University of Tasmania, Launceston, Tasmania
Sue.Read@utas.edu.au

Internationalisation and student employability are key agenda items for universities across the higher education (HE) community. Shared challenges include providing international students with employment opportunities through in-country internships, work placements and scholarships as well as providing all students with student mobility options. An international benchmarking exercise involving 10 universities across 4 countries was undertaken in late 2015 to address these shared challenges and learn from each other. This presentation will provide an overview of the key performance indicator international student employability across these 10 universities. A snapshot of key areas of good practice, areas for improvement or further development and areas for sharing will also be discussed.