
WRITING COACHING SERVICES

What Is Writing Coaching?

A writing coach can help you from the very beginning of a project—even if you only have an idea for a book or shorter piece. A coach helps you develop your idea, create a writing plan customized for you, listens to your struggles and helps you through them, helps you assess your progress and modify your writing plan if necessary, and more. Writing coaching is very personal, and both new and experienced writers have benefited from it. I can meet with you just one time to help get a project off the ground, a few times to get you on a strong trajectory, or on a regular basis to see a project through to the end. Coaching is different than editing, although the two can work together. Go to my website (pryalconsulting.com) to download my Developmental Editing menu to learn more about editing services.

Who Needs Writing Coaching?

Past clients range from professors to precocious high school students to everyone in between.

What Kinds of Projects Can You Help With?

I have coached clients through dissertations, novels, academic books, academic articles, journalism pieces, and more. I have a doctorate in composition and master's degree in creative writing, along with eleven years of teaching experience at the university level. I've published many novels and nonfiction books, including books on writing. Visit my website to view my credentials: pryalconsulting.com.

How Much Does Coaching Cost?

- Do-We-Work-Well-Together Session: Free. 15 minutes max, via video conference. Email me to set up: Katie@pryalconsulting.com
- First (can be only!) session: $100 for one hour (and increments of additional 30 minutes as necessary). Sometimes one session is all a writer needs to get a project off the ground or back on track. We can meet in person at my office or via video conference.
- Package of three, 1-hour sessions: $240 ($80/session). To help you build a strong habit of writing, you must use all three sessions within four weeks.